Tuesday, August 8, 2013 Olympic Fashion Disaster Swimsuits are coming out with a bit less coverage every year, which is great for modesty and comfort, but often means an enhanced chance of unexpected mishap during those crucial moments when one is caught in a public swimming pool or other watery locale. Several unfortunate folks found out the hard way today, when the British swimsuit that gives at least some modesty, the 2012 Sochi Women's Covert suit that maximized comfort, broke in ways that were more costly than hoped for. The British Swimming trade publication, SwimSwam, posted photos of several Olympic swimmers in the same suit, and while the women all wore the same bottom, the sides were different. One woman swam in the suit on July 30, when she finished 12th in the 800-meter women's freestyle. She broke the suit during the freestyle final, and it has now been rethreaded and is for sale for $2,100. A second woman swam in the suit on July 30. She was in the heat of the 4x100 relay on August 2, which she came in 2nd place in. She was also in the final on August 3. During that race, her suit ripped right off, and it has been rethreaded and is selling on Ebay for $800. A third woman swam in the suit on July 30, during the 800-meter women's freestyle final. She was 2nd in the heat on August 2, and 4th in the final. The suit ripped on the back. She has a cheap one with a Velcro and looks like it's in good shape. Some of the swimmers actually got away with wearing "unfashionable" outfits in the late 90's/early 2000's. I remember them also being cloth-covered, though.
